

The Madeira Islands have been declared as GM-free

17 March 2008, posted by Margarida Silca, Quercus, Portugal

The Madeira islands have been officially declared GM-free. It is a first in Portugal that an autonomous region comes out against GMOs with such strong worded language: all GM cultivation is absolutely forbidden. The Madeira government has been investing in organic farming and obviously doesn't want to see the effort go to waste.